University of Florida

GAINESVILLE, FL
500 HACKERS
36 HOURS

SwampHacks helped me discover my passion for computer science and programming, if it wasn't for SwampHacks, I wouldn't be a Computer Science major.

César C. González P.
Student at University of Florida

I found myself working with so many fascinating folks that I never met before and that I ended up growing from as a human being.

Amreeta Duttchoudhury
Director of HackGT

Coming back as a company representative, I saw that the second iteration only got better. The creativity and dedication of everyone involved was inspiring.

Sara Schuster
Microsoft Representative

In 2015, we started.

A group of students banded together to create a new community at the University of Florida that welcomes anyone to participate and transform their dreams into reality.
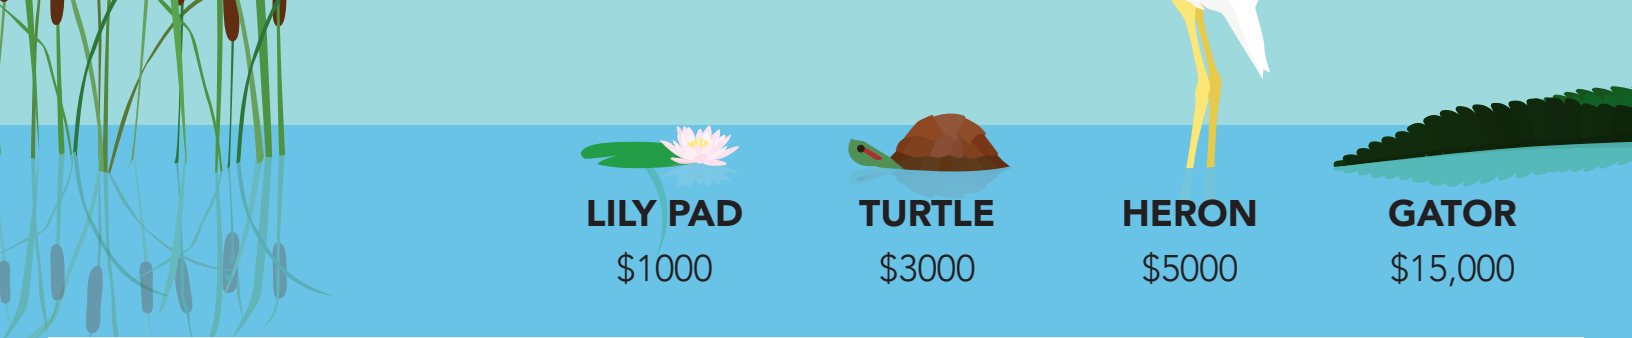

In 2016, we grew.

SwampHacks had hosted two hackathons of teamwork, competition, and cooperative learning with people of all backgrounds and passions.

In 2017, we build.

We will welcome the best SwampHacks iteration yet to support and showcase game-changing ideas from imagination to production. We can't wait to see you at the next greatest innovative challenge hosted in the heart of the Gator Nation.

LILY PAD

$1000

The Lily Pad, our base tier, is for our friends hoping to help us build an awesome event and contribute in any way possible. With that being said, we won't let you get away without some great perks

Through our base tier, you will recieve the tools and opportunities to connect with hackers, even including a 30 minute tech talk and company space.

Help cover the Swamp. Become a Lily Pad at SwampHacks 2017!

Company Space

Puddle
👤 × 1

Smaller, yet accessible to hackers. The Puddle holds a single representative and presents general exposure to our hackers.
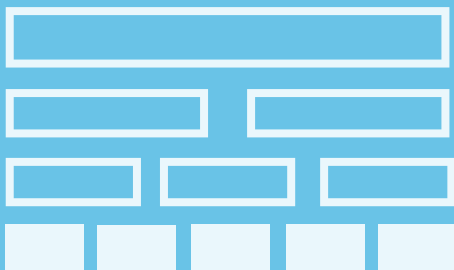

Event Hosting

Tech Talk Time
30 m

Even as a base tier, Lily Pads will still be provided space for a thirty minute tech talk on the topic of your choice. We want to spread as much knowledge to our hackers as possible, so any talk helps us throw an awesome event and helps you gain exposure.
